Distinction between the Roles and Responsibilities of Executive Directors and Non-Executive Directors

1. There is no legal distinction between executive and non-executive directors in terms of their responsibilities towards the company. Executive and non-executive directors have the same duties under company legislation.
2. In broad practical terms, however, it is recognised that executive and non-executive directors have different roles, as summarised below:
 - executive directors have an active role in directing the company's business, and are responsible for the day-to-day operation of the organisation
 - executive directors, led by the Chief Executive, make strategic and budgetary proposals to the Board and execute the strategy agreed by the Board within the approved budget
 - non-executive directors have a governance and oversight role; they are not involved in the day-to-day running of the organisation but monitor and challenge the executive activity and contribute to the development of strategy
 - non-executive directors, under the leadership of the Chair, ensure that there is an effective executive team in place, participate actively in the Board's decision-making process, bring independent judgement and challenge to discussions and decisions on strategy and performance, and exercise appropriate oversight of the executive team's execution of the agreed strategy
